branding matters

what a brand is, what it means to us and how to build it together.

At Bloxley, we're a young and ambitious company – built on a talented team, bold ideas, and a clear vision to create a new category in financial services. What we don't yet have is a brand that's as strong as our product. But we have everything it takes – and we will build that brand. Because we can, because we want to – and because we need to. Our brand will be a key driver of our success. It will make us visible and distinctive in a crowded market, give people a clear reason to choose us, and build the trust that long-term relationships are built on. Internally, it creates orientation, identity, and pride – and it guides and connects us as one team with one shared purpose.

What makes a strong brand?

A strong brand is a clear and consistent promise of performance and character. It comes from clarity about what we offer, consistency in how we show up, and credibility in what we say and do. Design elements like our logo, colors, or typography play an important role – they make the brand visible, tangible, and memorable. They may not be the brand itself, but they – and their careful application – are essential tools to build it.

How do we build it?

It helps us understand what Bloxley stands for — by imagining the brand as a real person. This perspective transforms the guide into a pragmatic and intuitive tool for shaping a brand that is consistent, authentic, and emotionally approachable. It gives us a relatable structure without limiting creativity. It offers clarity while leaving space for new ideas. It's a shared foundation we can build on — to keep the brand unique, alive, and moving forward. Please use it with joy, care, and the sense that you're playing an important role in building something meaningful.

Let's build a strong brand together – and reshape the future of finance with Bloxley.

What is a brand model?

Branding is about telling a unique, attractive, and convincing brand story to the staff, consumers, and the public. The coherence and consistency of this story is key to successful implementation and brand building.

The brand model serves internally as the core brand management tool. It defines and combines all relevant brand elements into one logical framework. So, it provides practical and operational guidance to manage and develop the brand.

The brand model is essential and mandatory for ensuring consistent messaging across all levels, making the brand experience convincingly cohesive and unified.

To make this tool as intuitive and relatable as possible, we use a clear analogy: we construct the brand like a person. Just like a person benefits from knowing who they are — what they stand for, how they act, and how they're perceived — a brand needs this internal clarity to act consistently, build trust, and stay true to itself over time.

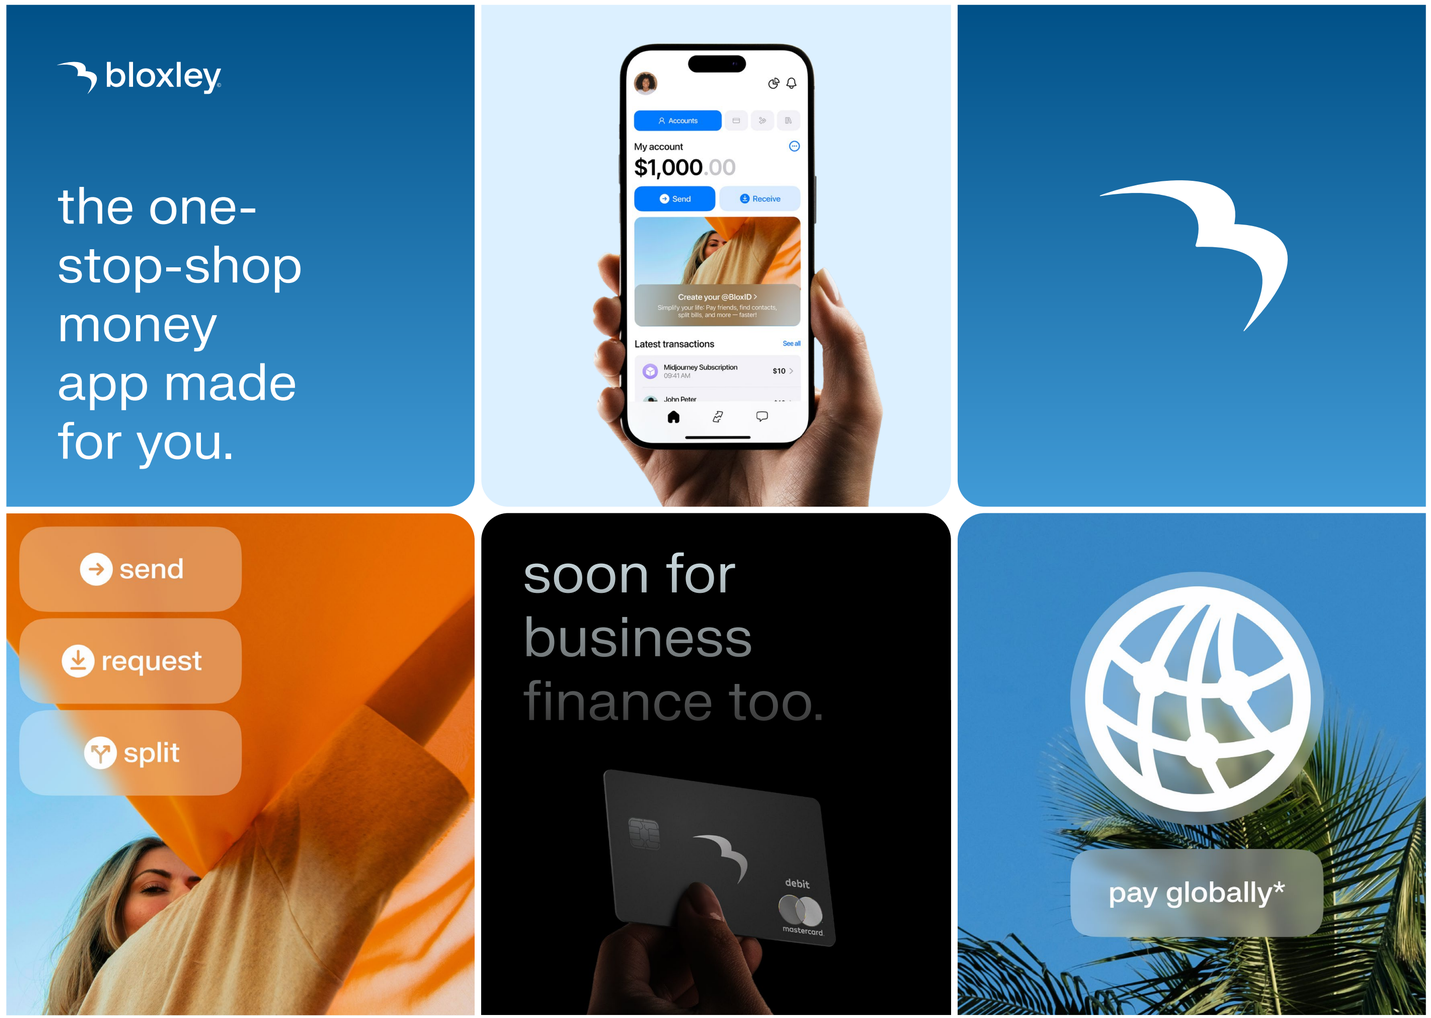
our guiding principles

how we shape our brand to make a strong impression

We give people space.
Use plenty of the sky gradient or sky background to give the brand space to breath. Negative space is not empty – it's confident.

We speak always clearly.
Our messages are bold, big, and direct. Headlines are lowercase, using clean typography with no clutter.

We deliver focus.
Every message holds one clear idea. Visuals support that idea, never compete with it.



We build trust through consistency.
Gradient directions, imagery, typography – they all follow clear rules. Repetition builds recognition.

We are grounded, but forward-looking.
Photography uses natural light and real moments. It feels cinematic and energetic – never overly staged or filtered.

We support seamless experiences.
Design is frictionless. Whether it's a UI screen or a debit card, the visual language adapts but never loses its character.

02

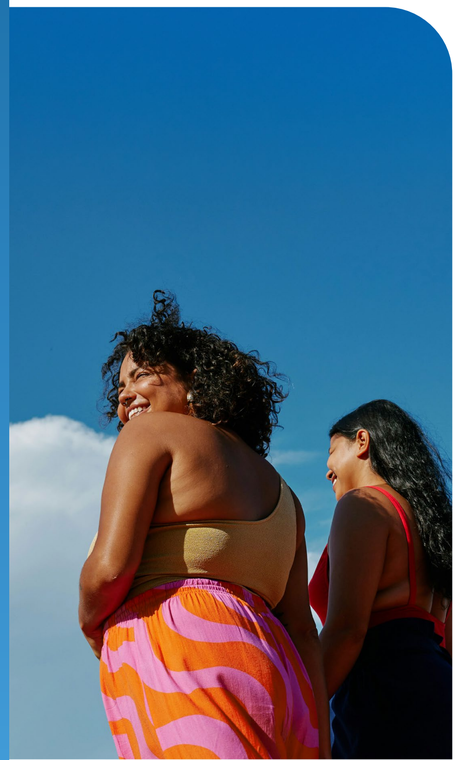
tone of voice

consistency counts

because one brand speaks with one voice

Building a better banking product is at the core of what we do. Expressing that in the right tone of voice for Bloxley is just as important.

Consistency is key, and these tips on your approach to writing help ensure Bloxley is recognised, respected, and remembered in the same way across different touchpoints.



In short:

- we're human, confident, and approachable
- keep it 1. personal, 2. short and 3. solution-based.

When you're writing communications for Bloxley, think of it as a person, with their own voice. That person - Bloxley - has begun a conversation about a new approach to banking, and the way we talk about it with our customers is conversational too - not the language of stuffy, corporate, old school banking.

Our language is clear, confident and coherent. Our messages are always underpinned by honesty and integrity.

We're a new bank with new ideas - and this is a new way of speaking for the category.

Quick writing checklist

Use first person, not third:

✓ We're building a better banking experience.
✗ Bloxley is building a better banking experience.

Use first person, not third:

✓ Hyperbanking. We actually had to make that word up.
✗ With new levels of consumer experience we've moved beyond normal banking to what we've termed 'hyperbanking'

Use contractions:

✓ Money transfers have never been easier.
✗ Money transfers can be a real hassle.

Short and sweet is better:

✓ Your money. Your look.
✗ Bloxley allows you to customize your card with different

Say it with a smile:

✓ Tap, tap, done.
✗ With just a few clicks you can complete transfers.

Final check
A great way to check your writing all sounds on-brand? Read it to yourself out loud (yes, really).

For legal copy, like terms, conditions and disclaimers, keep the writing pragmatic and straightforward.

the core of everything

what defines our brand also shapes our voice

Powerful words. Simple concept.

Empowered optimism...

- is the core of our brand, our reason for being
- creates a better financial future
- is what we're giving Bloxley customers, with revolutionary banking tools that make money a gateway, not a burden
- is a deliberately different approach from traditional financial institutions - and accordingly, the way we walk and talk is different too. (See? What kind of bank would say that?)

We speak in a way that's progressive, positive, and celebrates performance.

In doing so, we lead the conversation about neobanking:
solutions designed to simplify managing money.

For more information please view our brand cheat sheet → p. 14

How that sounds

No need to use the actual term 'Empowered Optimism' in communications - and no need to use any of the words above either. They're just descriptors of the way we should sound to our customers.

who we’re talking with we’re speaking to real people — never forget that People inspired to thrive with a better banking experience.

Our core audience is 18-25, with a stretch to 18-36. They’re tech-savvy, time-poor, and cynical about advertising and marketing in general. Our broader audience is older, and may be more intimidated by newer tools and technology. For both groups, clear, concise communication is key. Our brand voice keeps the conversation around neobanking informative and exciting.

details matter

your guide to speak and stay on brand

We always refer to ourselves as Bloxley, capital B.

We get excited about the future of banking, but keep it composed. So avoid exclamation points.

Our Bloxley users are part of something special: they're Bloxley members. Not Bloxley customers, not Bloxley users, not Bloxley bankers.

We're conversational, but not overly playful. So if we ever use emojis, we only use one – and more as an icon abbreviations than expression of emotion.

Emojis like these are ok:

🌐 📞 ✅ ⚡ 📈 ☀️😉

Emojis like these are not:

If in doubt, go without.

Social posting? Less hashtags, more impact. Don't use 'one off' hashtags that have limited or zero usage, like #anewwaytosave; at the other end of the scale, hashtags like #banking are too broad, and can come across as token. Both approaches have limited impact to posts.

Capitalization gets its own section

Refer back to page XX of this style guide (below) for a visual overview of how and when you should capitalize anything you write.

For all consumer-facing communication, we prefer bloxley to always be lowercase, as it is in the logo. Avoid using it as the first word in headlines or sentences.

Capitalization of Bloxley is permissible in legal and press communications.

For headlines:
always use lowercase only.(we break conventional rules of grammar for a better visual language, and because it reflects the way we're breaking the conventional rules of banking)

- ✓ the one-stop shop made for you
- ✗ The one-stop shop made for you

For regular body copy:
(i.e. not headlines or buttons),always use sentence case over title case.

- ✓ Your money: lightning-fast, utterly convenient
- ✗ Your Money: Lightning-Fast, Utterly Convenient

For proper names of people and other brands:
Always use upper case.

- ✓ your bloxley Mastercard: next level
- ✗ your Bloxley Mastercard: next level

- "No ATM fees"

Use of “Instant”

The term "instant" should only be used if there is verifiable proof that the process is truly instantaneous. If such proof cannot be provided, use phrases that accurately describe the specific timeframe.

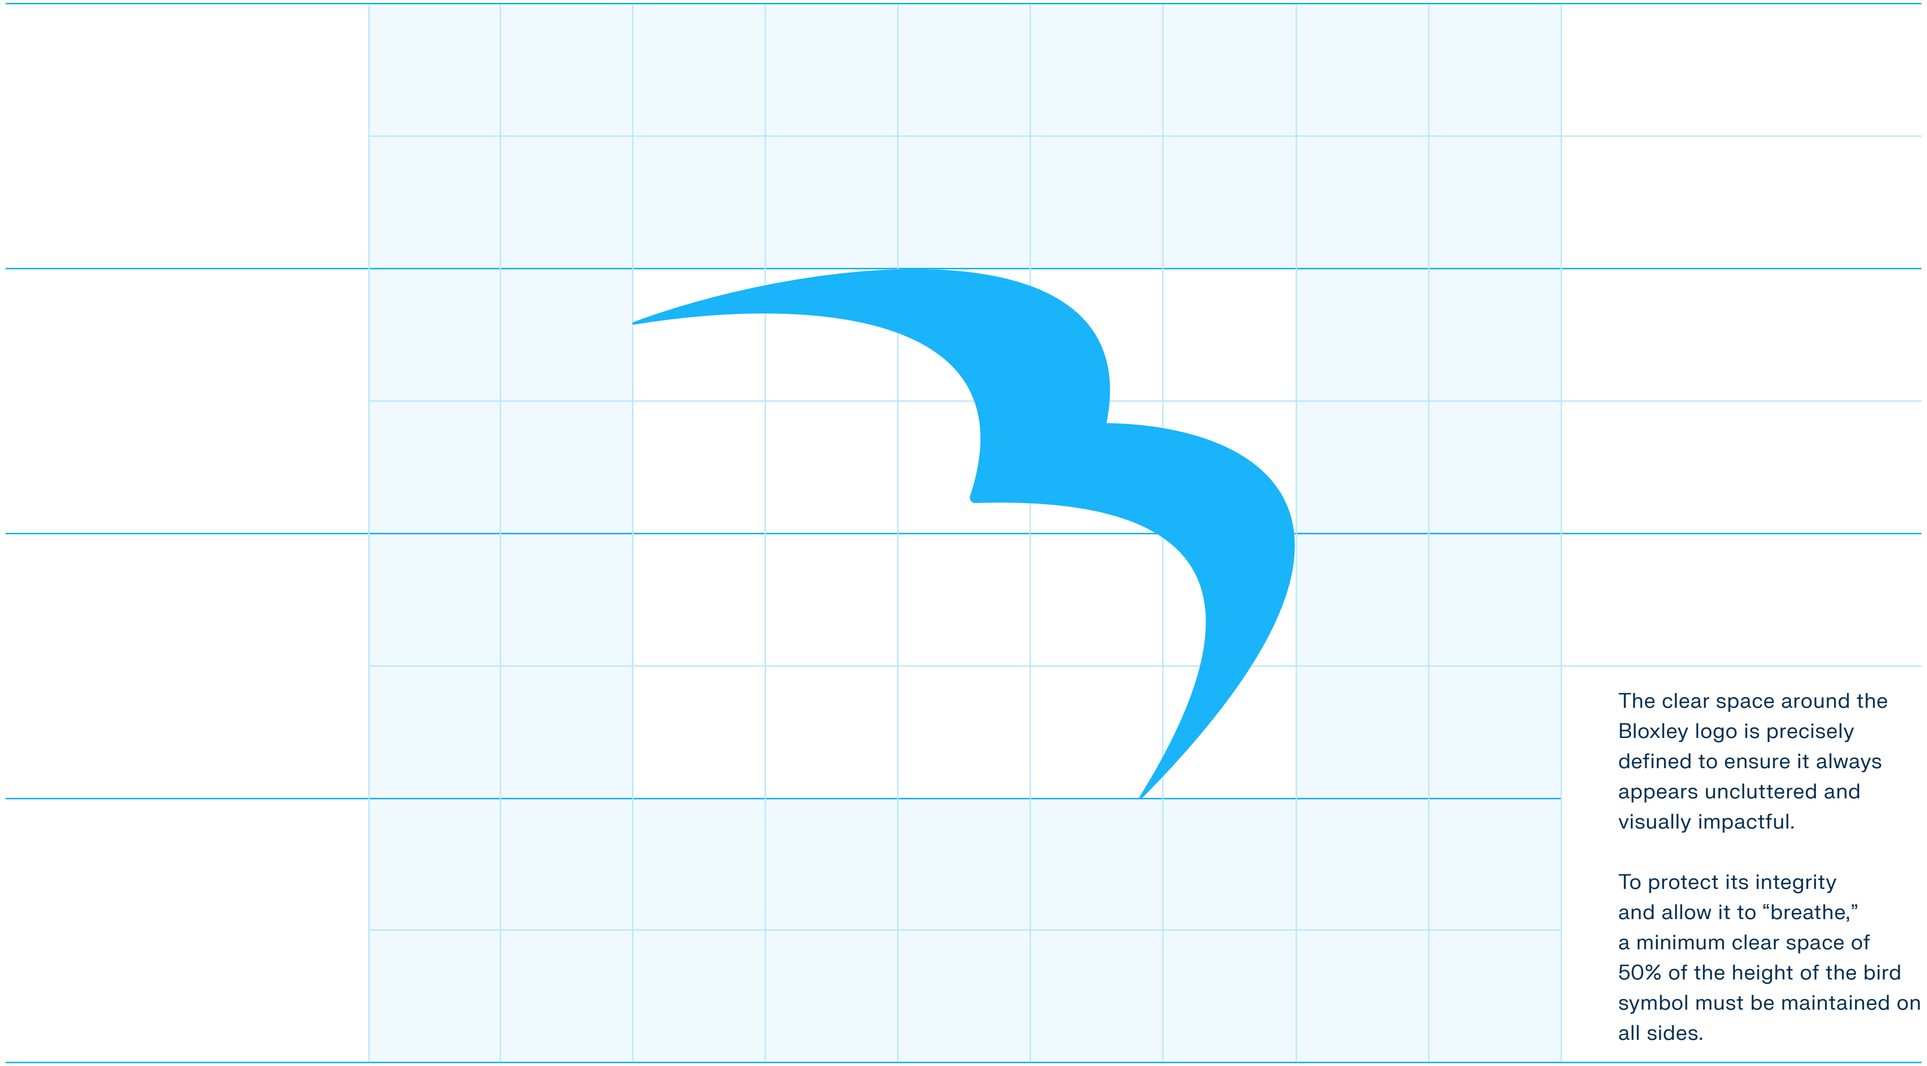
brand mark

The new Bloxley logo is a central element of our refreshed visual identity. Its clean, flowing silhouette of a bird in flight embodies the spirit of our brand: lightness, clarity and the freedom to move forward.

With soft curves and an open form, the picture mark reflects our belief in a modern financial experience – one that feels intuitive, empowering, and full of possibility.

More than just a symbol, it represents the Bloxley mindset: progress without friction and confidence without compromise.

To ensure maximum versatility across all touchpoints, the logo is available in multiple versions.



The clear space around the Bloxley logo is precisely defined to ensure it always appears uncluttered and visually impactful.

To protect its integrity and allow it to “breathe,” a minimum clear space of 50% of the height of the bird symbol must be maintained on all sides.

The combined logo – featuring the Bloxley wings alongside the wordmark – forms a balanced and distinctive brand signature.

The spacing between the picture mark and the logotype equals one quarter of the bird symbol's width.

To create visual harmony in centered applications, the same amount of spacing is applied after the logotype – ensuring the composition feels optically balanced from left to right.

The logotype itself is based on a modern geometric typeface and combines clarity with warmth, echoing the Bloxley experience: confident, precise, and approachable.

This combination should always be used as provided, without altering proportions or spacing, to maintain a consistent and recognizable brand presence.

The clear space is defined by the full height of the picture mark on all sides.

color versions

The preferred version of the Bloxley logo is the two-color variant, featuring azure blue wings and a midnight blue logotype.

For use cases where color is limited or printing constraints apply, single-color versions are also available. These should be used thoughtfully to maintain brand recognition and visual integrity across all applications.

bloxley_logo_dark bloxley_logo_black

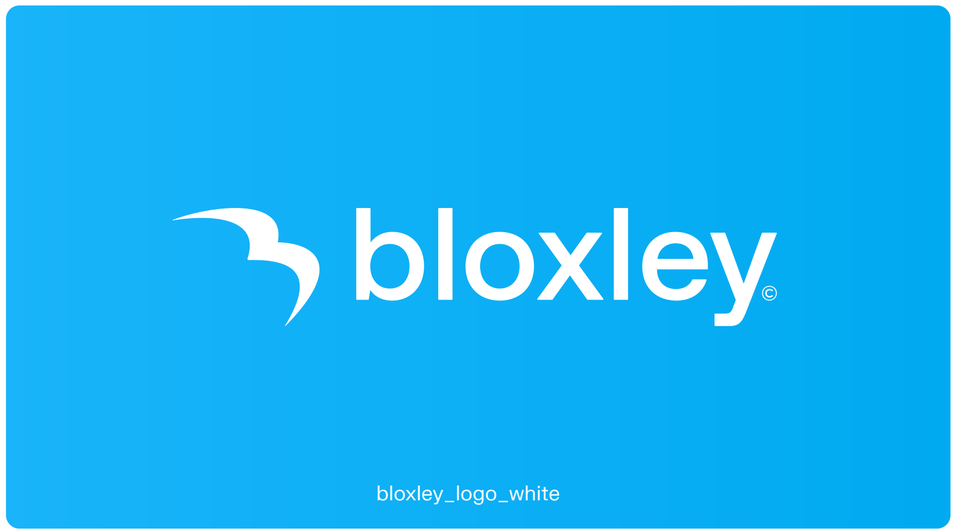
bloxley_logo_light



bloxley_logo_white

layout placement

The Bloxley logo is more than just a brand mark – it carries the idea of lightness, movement, and elevation. To reflect this, the logo is preferably placed in the upper left or right corner of a format, symbolizing flight through open skies.

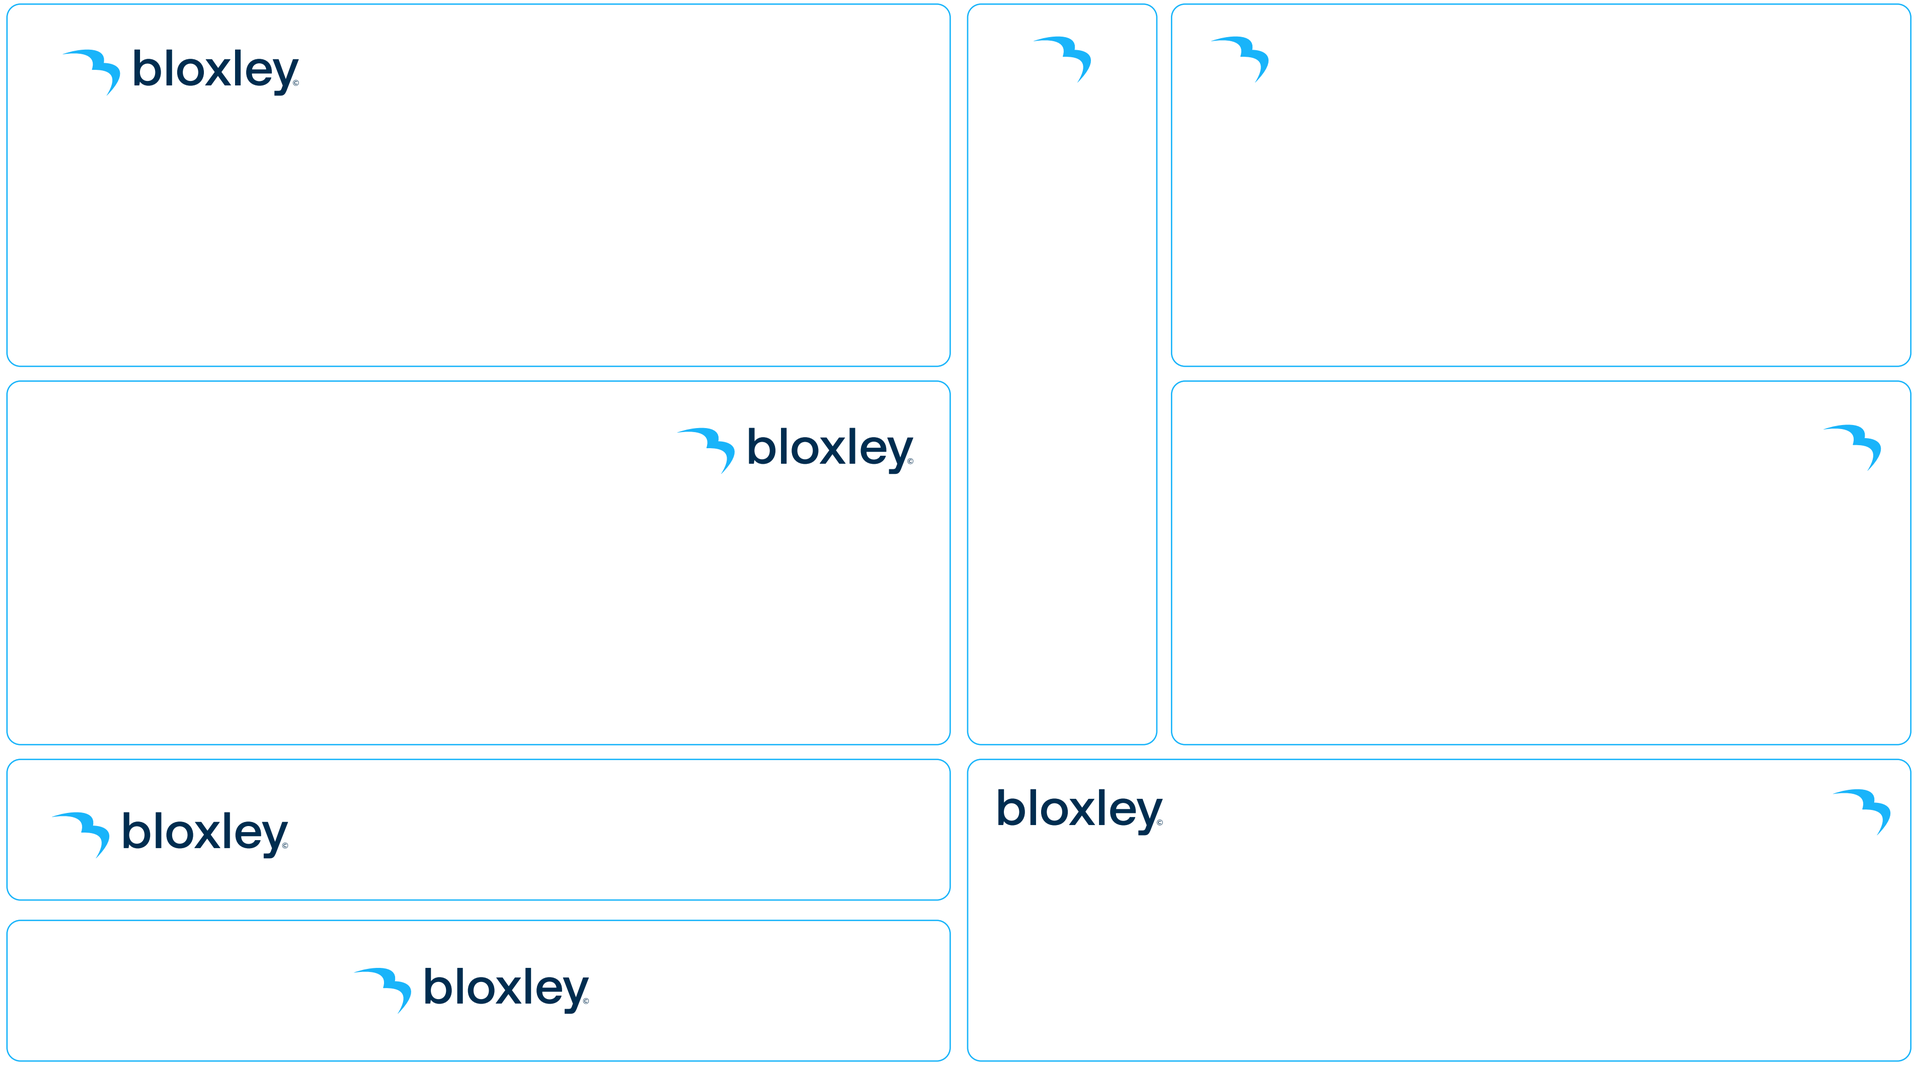
A bottom placement is only permitted in exceptional cases. It is also acceptable to center the logo at the top of a layout, as long as optical balance is maintained.

The same principles apply to the picture mark when used on its own.

In special cases, the picture mark may be separated from the logotype – for example, to add flexibility in dynamic layouts or interfaces. In these instances:

- Proportions and alignment must remain consistent.
- The spacing between picture mark and logotype may be increased to suit the format.
- The order of elements may also be reversed, with the wings positioned on the right and the logotype on the left.

These variations should always respect the visual harmony of the original logo lockup and be used with care.



app icons

Bloxley's brand comes to life across digital platforms through a range of custom app icons and favicons.

We offer several icon variations to suit different backgrounds and interfaces: dark, light, tinted, azure and our preferred sky gradient. The sky gradient version best expresses our brand story — light, open, and full of possibility.

For small sizes, we use a simplified version of the logo to ensure optimal legibility.

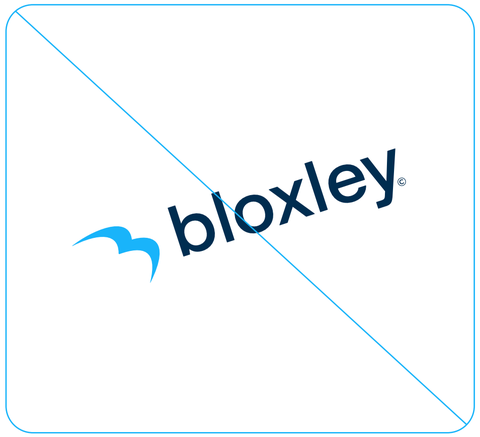
things to avoid

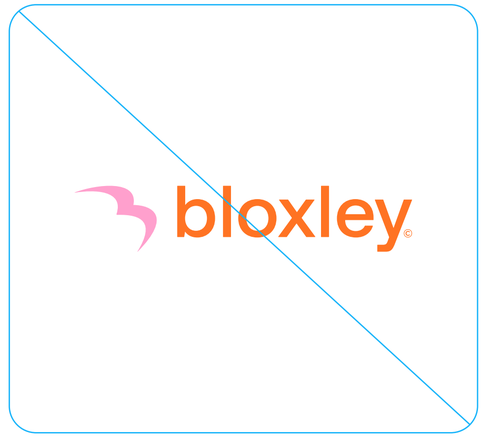
To maintain the integrity of the Bloxley brand, the logo must always be used consistently.

The following examples show what not to do: these rules help protect the clarity, balance and recognizability of our visual identity.

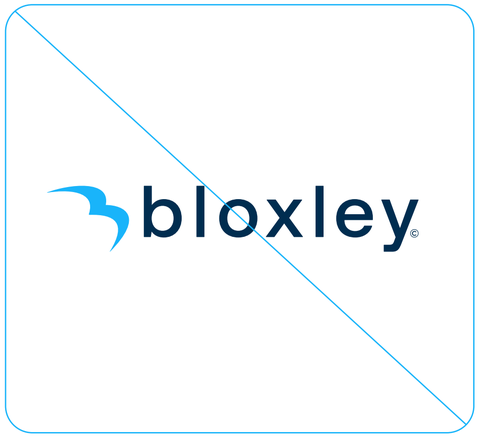
Do not distort.



Do not rotate.



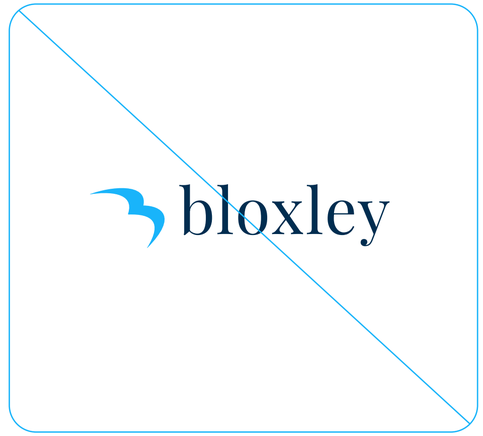
Do not change colors.



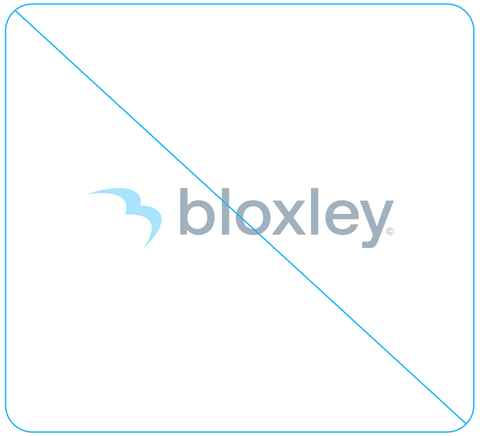
Do not change spacing.

Do not place on busy backgrounds.

Do not use low contrast.



Do not replace the typeface.



Do not apply transparency.

claim

Our claim expresses what we stand for: financial tools that lift people up. It’s about turning money into momentum – empowering our users to move freely, confidently, and with purpose.

We combine performance with simplicity, offering intuitive solutions that work. Our tone is positive, forward-looking, and full of energy. And we stay progressive — always evolving, always pushing for better.

Just like wings, we give people the freedom to rise.

brand architecture

Our brand architecture is designed to create clarity, consistency and distinction across all offerings. At the core stands Bloxley – the master brand that represents our vision: empowering optimism.

All products, services and membership tiers are structured within a branded house system. This means that everything is clearly connected to Bloxley, both visually and verbally. From our Basic, Plus, and Premium memberships to our digital tools and physical touchpoints – the experience is unified under one strong identity.

To create hierarchy and differentiation, we use color schemes, naming conventions and imagery styles that reflect the unique feel of each tier, while staying true to the brand's overall look and voice.

color palette

The Bloxley color palette is inspired by the ever-changing sky – open, vibrant, and full of movement.

At the heart of our visual identity is the sky gradient. It gives the brand its distinct personality and can be used boldly in backgrounds or subtly through typographic highlights.

For contrast and clarity, we pair it with azure blue, complemented by a soft light blue background tone and midnight blue for text.

Generous use of white space supports a sense of ease and spaciousness, helping content breathe and reinforcing a feeling of calm.

In cases where midnight blue is not suitable, black may be used to ensure optimal legibility.

Our secondary colors — a gentle blue, warm orange and soft pink — represent different moods of the sky: breeze, sunset, and sunrise. These shades add emotional range and flexibility while staying true to the brand's uplifting tone.

Together, these colors create a visual language that feels fresh, grounded and full of forward momentum.

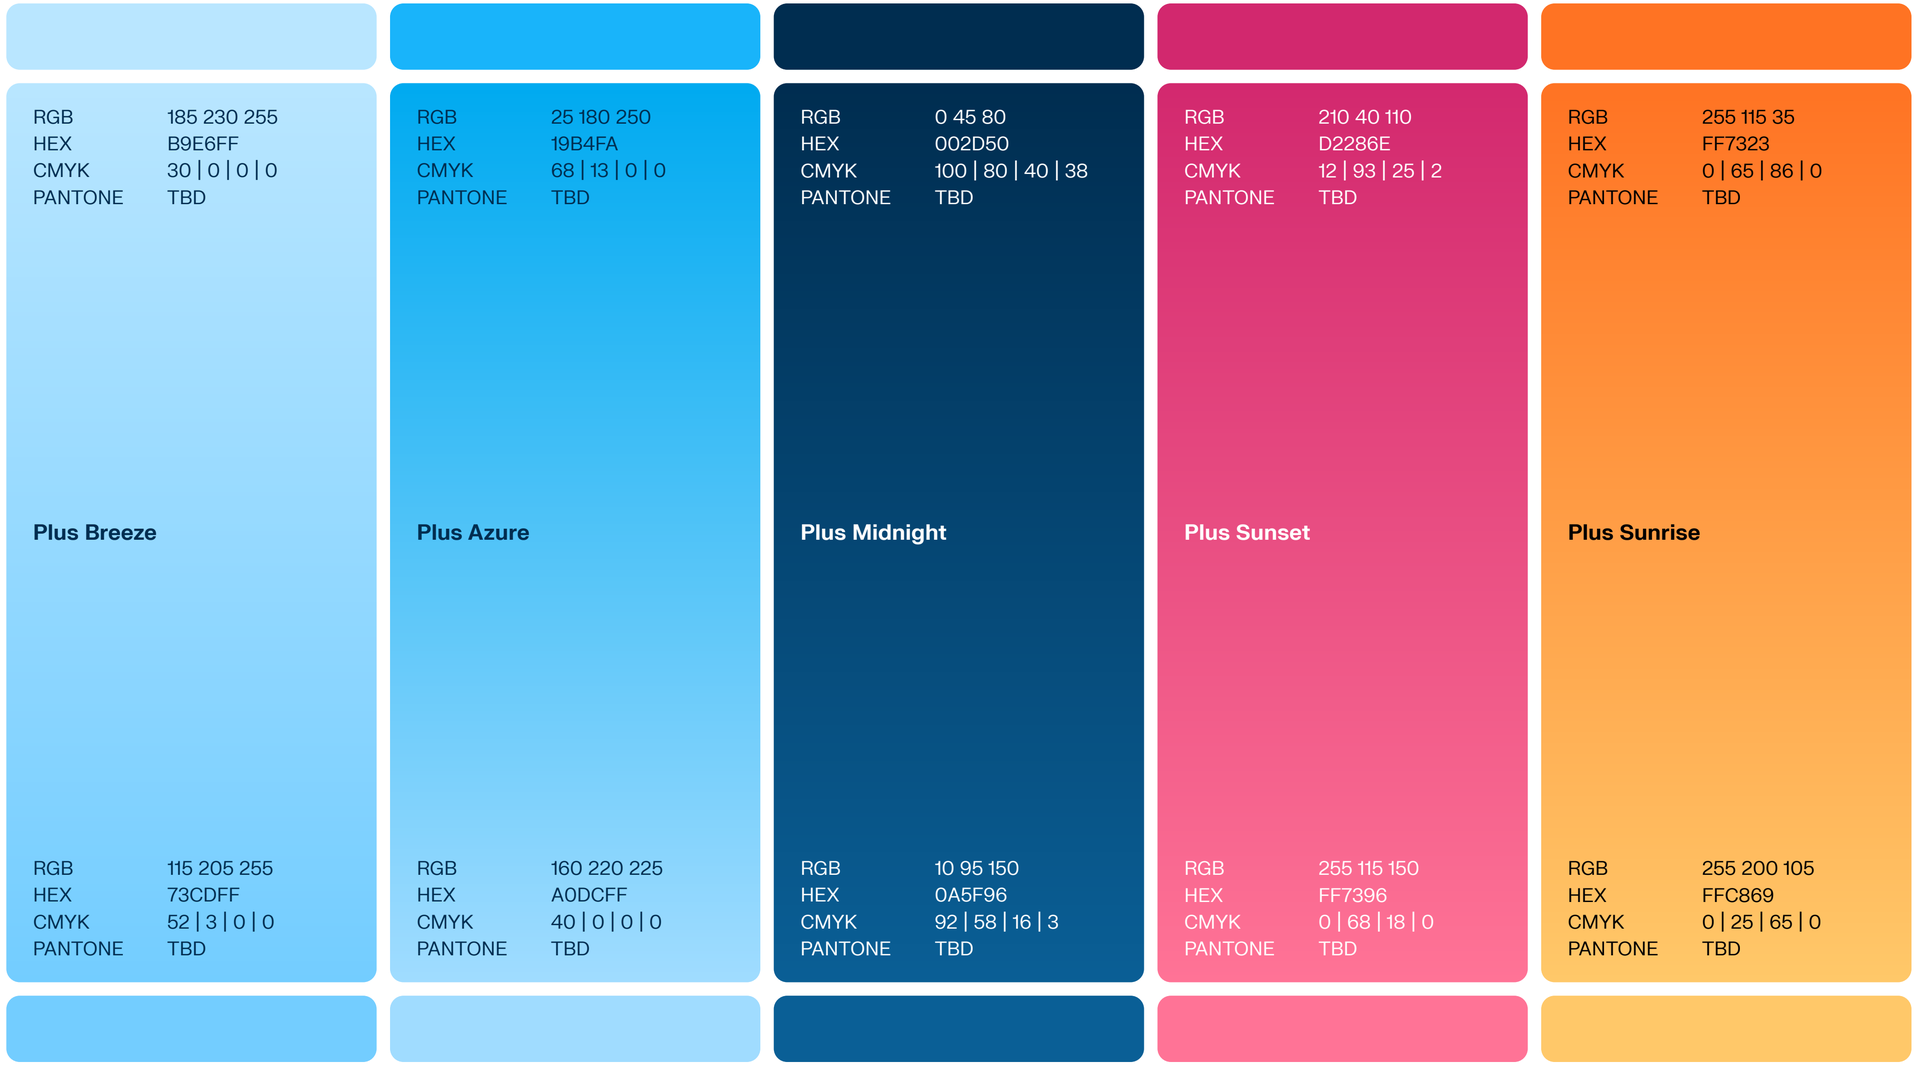
color basic cards

Basic cards carry a light two-tone gradient inspired by the sky at its clearest. The five shades (Breeze, Azure, Midnight, Sunrise, and Sunset) create an uncluttered, versatile look that keeps everyday transactions feeling clear and effortless.

color plus cards

Plus cards use the same color family (Breeze, Azure, Midnight, Sunrise, and Sunset) but the gradients are richer, mirroring moments when the sky shows more saturation. The increased intensity adds a clearer visual distinction while remaining consistent with the main palette.



color premium cards

Premium cards introduce a muted metallic surface that hints at the sky's softer, layered tones. The five finishes (Breeze, Cosmos, Midnight, Sunset, and Cloud) deliver a polished, elevated presence without straying from Bloxley's sky-inspired color system.

color combinations (marketing & web)

Our layouts rely on light, open backgrounds to keep the brand feeling clear and uncluttered.

Use the following options:

- Sky Gradient — primary background; delivers the signature Bloxley look.
- White — equally preferred; maximises contrast and breathing room.
- Azure Blue — for controlled variety: 100 % Azure for strong emphasis or large feature areas.
- 20 % Azure blue for lighter content sections or highlight areas.
- 10 % Azure blue for subtle accents and expansive calm zones.

Limit each layout to one blue background tone at a time. Combine with lots of white space and midnight blue or black text to maintain legibility and brand consistency.

Important: the color combinations and usage rules defined in this guide apply to brand, web and marketing materials.

The Bloxley app follows its own specific color system for UI components and user flows, which may differ from the guidelines outlined here. Detailed app-specific color standards will be documented and added at a later stage.

brand typefaces (marketing & web)

FK Neue Grotesk is used primarily in Regular and Medium weights across all brand communications. These two styles provide the ideal balance between readability and character – Regular feels open and calm, while Medium offers a slightly stronger presence for emphasis without overwhelming the layout. Together, they form the core of our typographic system.

Bold

Light and Bold weights are reserved for specific use cases. Light may be used in very large headline sizes, such as campaign visuals, where its fine strokes add elegance without sacrificing clarity.

Bold is used sparingly, typically for highlighting key words or phrases within text blocks. These styles should never dominate a layout but instead support clear hierarchy and visual rhythm.

typography hierachy (marketing & web)

Our typographic hierarchy centres on oversized, lowercase headlines set in Regular weight: their generous scale and light stroke create an open, airy first impression that defines the Bloxley look.

Medium weight steps down smoothly for subheads and key pull-outs, adding subtle emphasis without overpowering the page, while Regular remains the go-to for body copy.

Bold appears sparingly inside body copy, acting as a quick highlight that guides the reader to key points while preserving the overall lightness of the page.

This balance of size and weight keeps every layer distinct yet cohesive – ensuring information flows effortlessly from headline to detail.

Important: capitalization rules defined in these guidelines apply only to web, brand and marketing applications. The Bloxley app follows its own set of UX writing and capitalization standards, which are not yet included in this document. They will be added to the guidelines at a later stage.

brand typeface (app)

For the Bloxley app interface, we use Inter Tight as the primary typeface. It is a variable Google Font designed for clarity and performance in digital UI environments — especially on small screens and high-density layouts.

Inter Tight is available to everyone, lightweight to load, and ideal for responsive, fast-moving interfaces. It supports accessibility standards while maintaining a clean, modern look that complements our brand.

FK Neue Grotesk remains the lead typeface for all brand, web, and marketing applications. Inter Tight is used exclusively within the app to ensure functional consistency and optimal usability.

design elements

gradient

Our signature gradients anchor Bloxley's visual language. Whether they flow across a full background, fill headline letterforms, or accent a layout as a decorative element, the rule is constant: the tone starts deeper at the top and fades lighter toward the bottom, echoing an open sky and guiding the eye downward with gentle ease. Use this top-to-bottom transition every time to keep the brand instantly recognisable and atmospherically consistent.

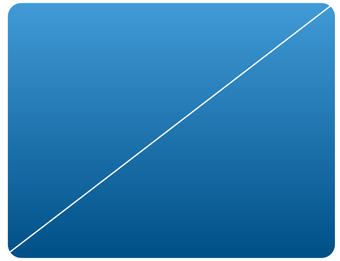
Important:
Avoid altering the gradient's orientation: never apply it horizontally, diagonally, or in reverse (light on top, dark on bottom). Any deviation from the top-dark-to-bottom-light flow breaks the sky reference and disrupts brand consistency.



06

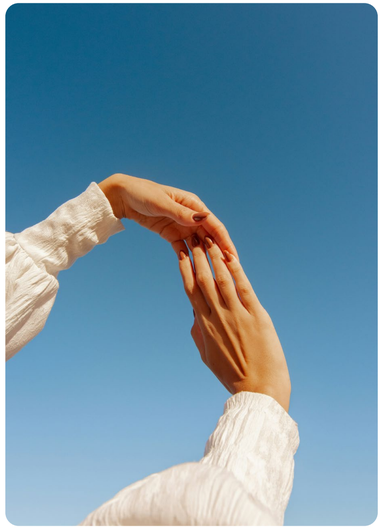
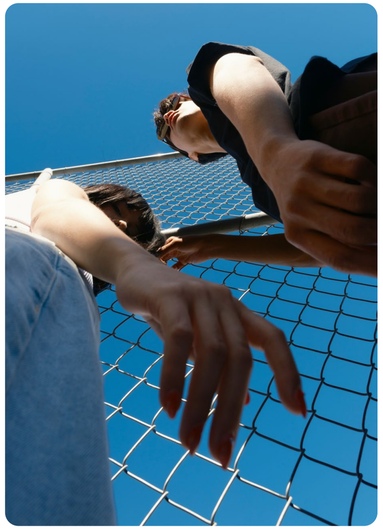
imagery lifestye

Our people photography reflects the spirit of Bloxley: open, energetic, and full of forward motion. We use natural light – preferably sunlight – to create a vivid, high-contrast look that feels optimistic and alive. Subjects appear confident, relaxed, and real, captured in candid moments rather than posed scenarios.

Settings are often outdoors, with wide compositions, negative space and a clear sense of air and movement. Blue tones and glimpses of the sky are welcome and help connect the imagery to our overall brand world.

The result is a cinematic, uncluttered visual language that mirrors the freedom and clarity we offer through every product experience.





best case examples

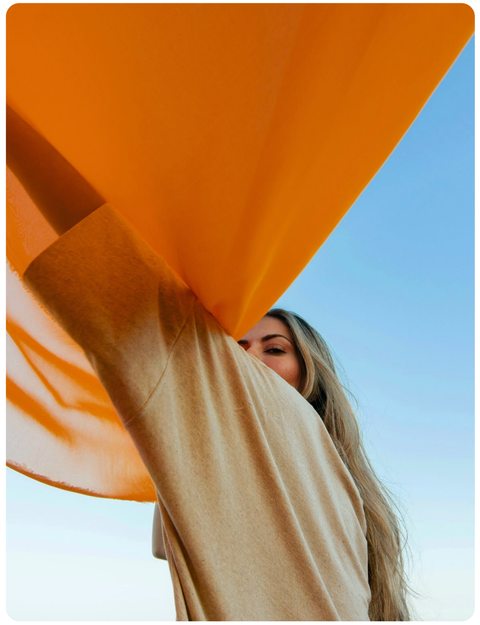
In our best examples of lifestyle imagery, the perspective plays a crucial role. We often work with slightly lower angles to capture a broader stretch of open sky, reinforcing the feeling of freedom and upward movement.

Subjects are photographed in dynamic, candid moments – walking, running, stretching or interacting naturally with their surroundings. Clear compositions with plenty of negative space, natural sunlight, and a vivid connection to the outdoors are essential to maintain the energetic, optimistic tone that defines the Bloxley visual language.

Possible search phrases:

- People sky/blue
- Portrait sky/blue
- „Name of outdoor sport“ sky
- Active lifestyle
- Outdoor activity
- Friends sky
- Jumping sky
- Low angle

The vibrant natural light and relaxed, authentic expression capture the sense of freedom, energy and optimism.



The strong blue sky, warm sunlight and bold orange accent from our secondary color palette create a vivid, uplifting composition with plenty of space for dynamic layouts.

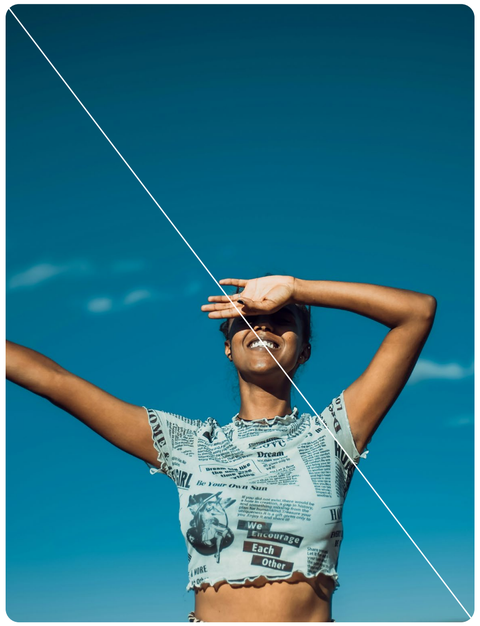
The playful, active pose and clear, minimal environment perfectly express movement, confidence and an open mindset – core elements of our visual world.

The confident look and cinematic lighting create a powerful yet uncluttered image, while the subtle orange and pink accents naturally complement our secondary color palette.

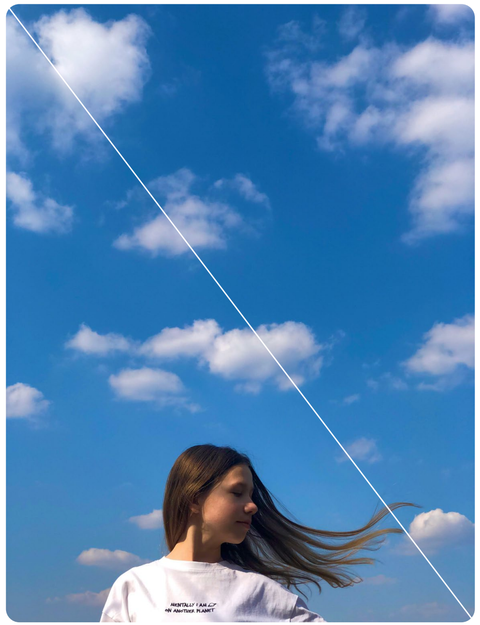
things to avoid

When selecting imagery, ensure it meets the high visual standards of the Bloxley brand. Clothing should feel appropriate, confident, and timeless – overly trendy looks are not suitable.

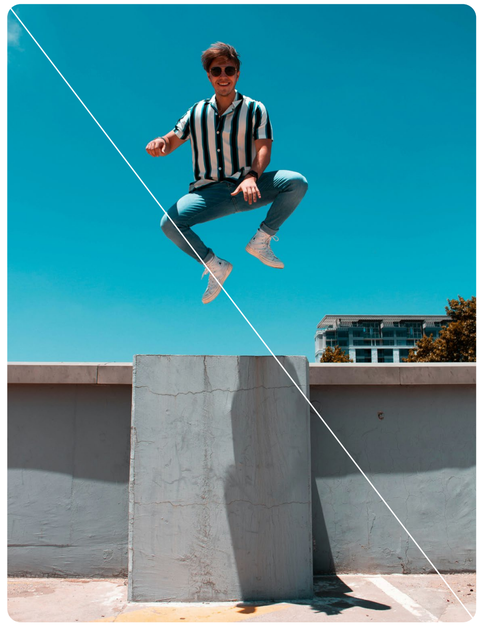
Lighting must be natural and warm; images with flat, cold, or artificial tones should be avoided. Skies should appear vivid and clear, with no heavy filters or visible banding disrupting the gradient. Backgrounds must remain open and uncluttered to maintain the feeling of freedom and clarity that defines Bloxley's visual identity.



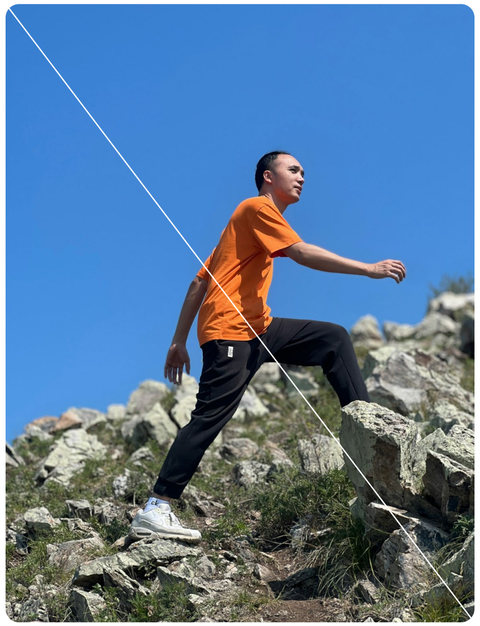
Clothing feels too busy and unrefined, perhaps showing too much skin. The coloring of this image is not entirely on brand. Visible banding in the sky creates an unnatural gradient transition, further reducing the quality.



The sky dominates the composition disproportionately, making the subject feel lost.
The shadow on the face feels too dark and the clouds create a busy, distracting background, reducing clarity and focus.



The photo quality feels low and appears filtered, lacking the natural, high-end, cinematic finish we expect. The overall look is closer to user-generated content and does not meet the brand's quality standards.

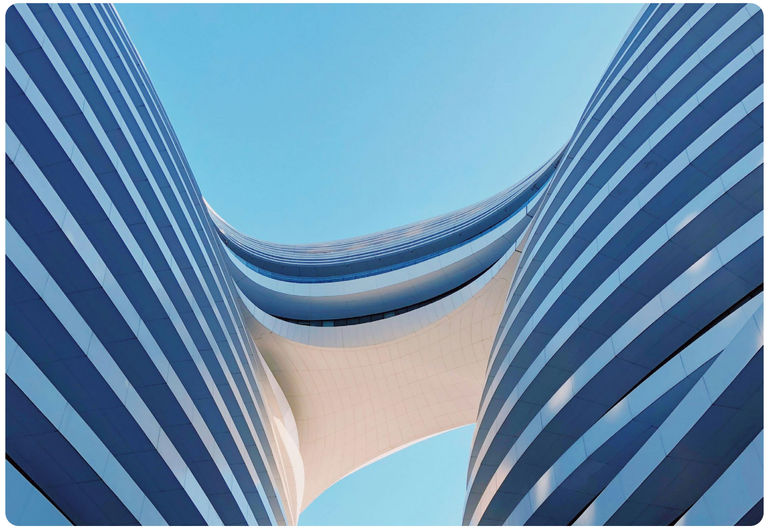


The sky looks very flat with no depth or tonal variation. The lighting feels dull and lifeless, missing the energetic, vivid atmosphere that defines our imagery.

imagery environment

Our environmental imagery supports the same mood as our people photography: open, bright, and full of possibility. We favor natural settings with lots of sky, clean architectural lines, and minimal visual noise.

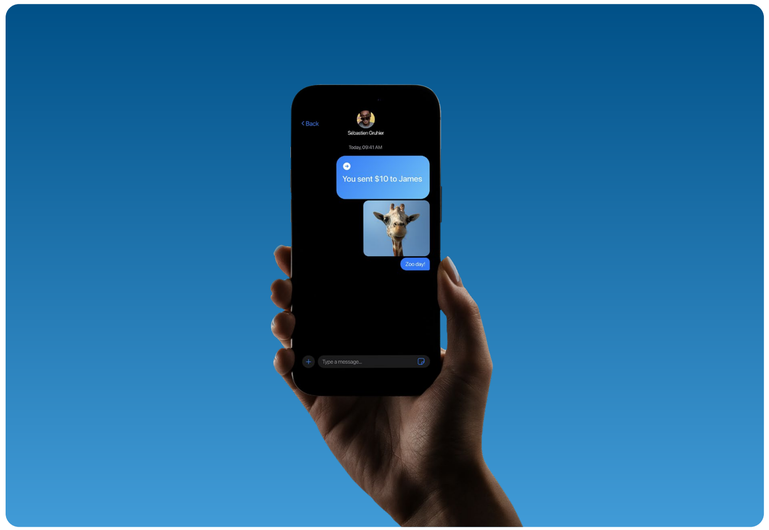
Scenes should feel spacious and uncluttered, with soft light, depth, and a sense of calm energy. Whether urban or natural, environments should reflect a lifestyle that feels confident, optimistic, and in motion.

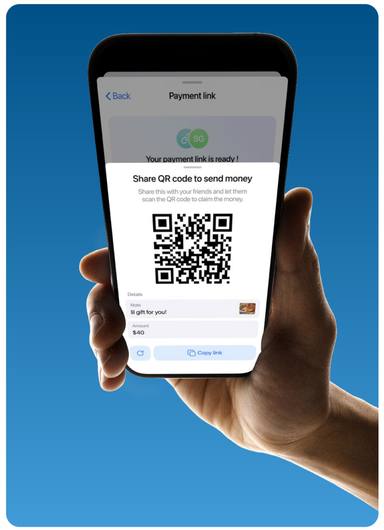


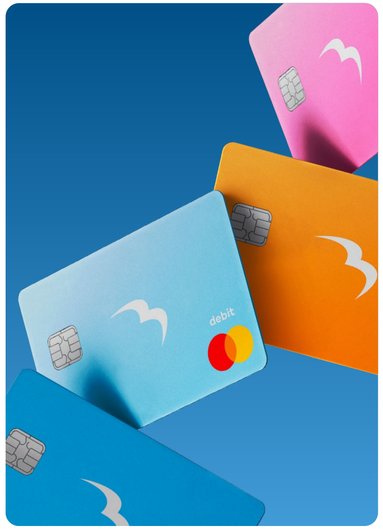
imagery product

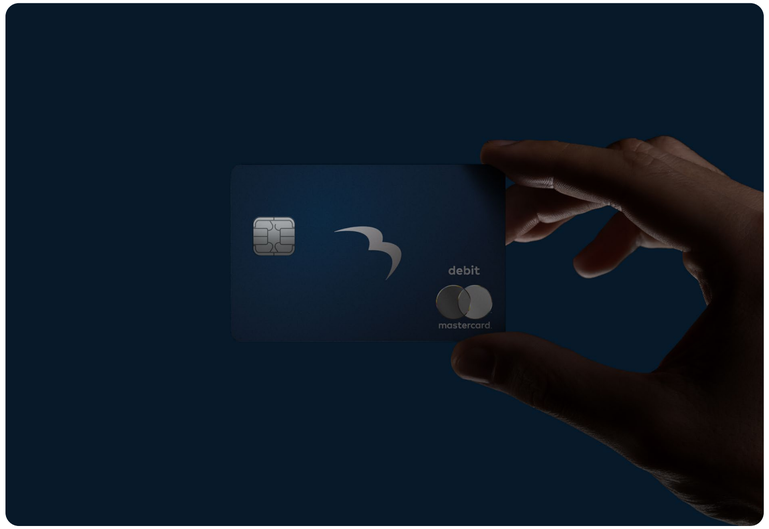
Bloxley product imagery captures the same sense of lightness and clarity found throughout our brand. Devices, phones, and cards are often shown floating or gently tilted, creating a feeling of movement and ease.

Backgrounds are kept minimal – typically light, soft blue, or using the sky gradient – to maintain focus on the product while reinforcing our visual identity. Reflections, shadows, and lighting should remain subtle to preserve a clean, weightless atmosphere.









imagery sky backgrounds

Our sky backgrounds convey a sense of clarity, freedom, and open possibility. They feature wide, distant skies with minimal visual elements – soft clouds, subtle stars, or faint mountain ranges in the distance. Always photographed from afar, these skies leave room to breathe and reflect the spaciousness at the heart of the Bloxley brand.

Each background is gently aligned with the color schemes of our membership tiers, supporting the visual hierarchy without distraction.

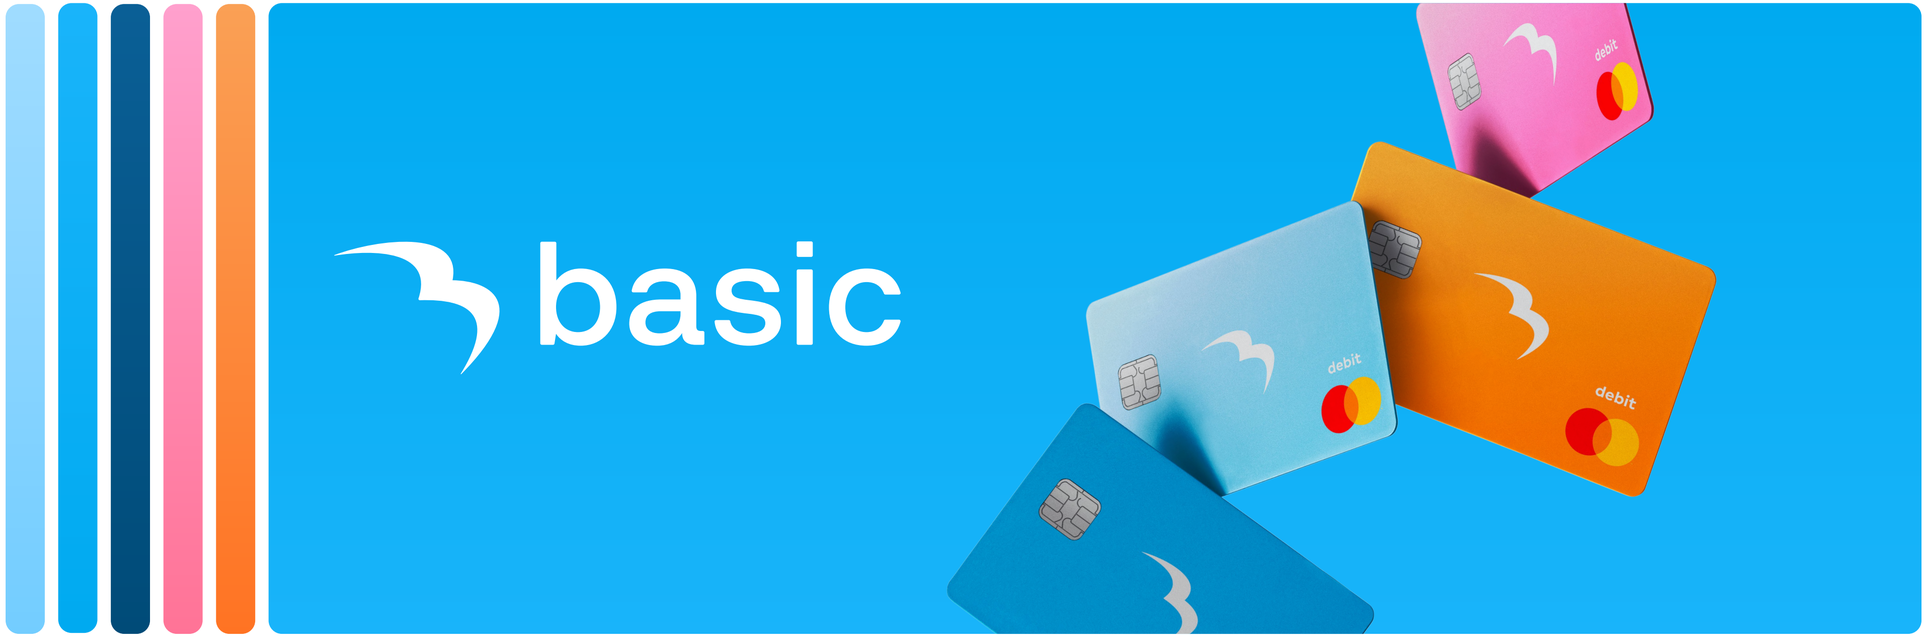
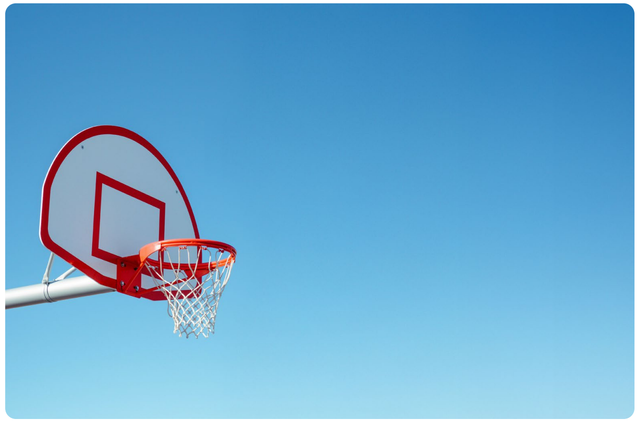
memberships

basic

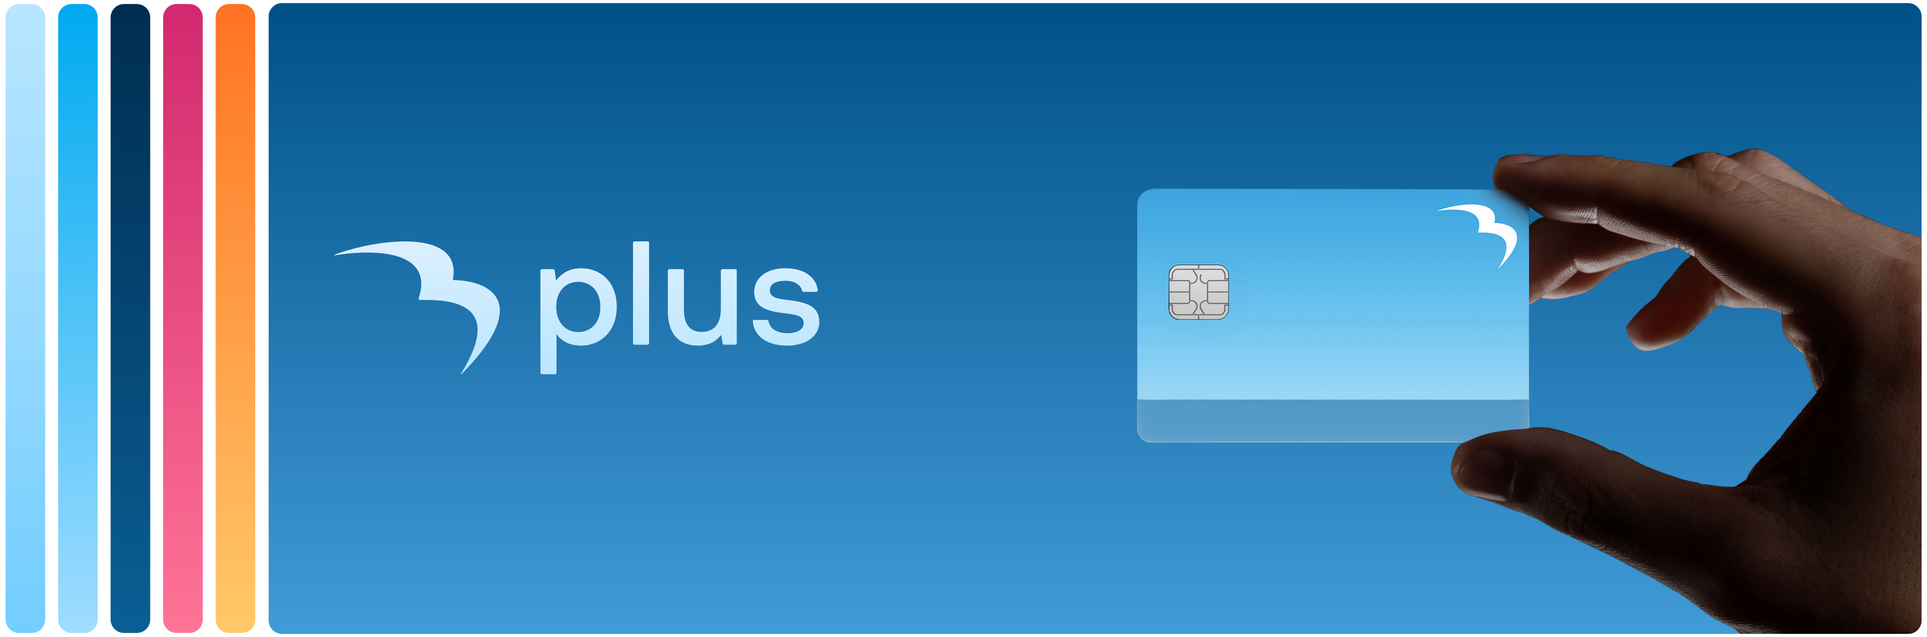
Our Basic tier is designed to feel fresh, friendly, and approachable. The visual language is light and optimistic, with flat colors, minimal gradients, and vibrant lifestyle imagery. Clear skies, warm lighting, and open compositions convey simplicity and ease – key to the Basic experience.





plus

Plus introduces more depth and refinement while staying accessible. Gradients are added to the logo and supporting colors, enhancing dimension. Imagery leans into sky-toned backgrounds and subtle depth, offering a slightly more elevated and aspirational tone while remaining open and energetic.



premium

Premium reflects sophistication and confidence. Visuals use a soft metallic finish and a muted, refined color palette. Imagery shifts toward more serious, focused expressions – still natural, but with a quieter tone. The overall look is clean, polished and built for trust.

To further differentiate from lower tiers, dark backgrounds like Premium Cosmos or Premium Midnight (p. 16) can be applied in communication, adding contrast and exclusivity.
